Researchers at the University of Leeds are coordinating a bid in response to SFS-06-2016: Weeding - strategies, tools and technologies for sustainable weed management. They are leading technologists with expertise in weeding robots. To complete their consortium they are looking for partners in the following disciplines:

1. Socio-economic researchers to examine the impacts of weeding robots on farming communities, labour and economies.
2. Practicing farmers or agricultural universities/colleges to study how real farmers could and should make use of robotic weeding technology, preferably via tests in real-world situations rather than set-up field trials. Identify the barriers to adoption and recommend strategies to reduce them.
3. A leading business school to examine markets and opportunities for weeding robots.

Partners should be leaders in their fields, have relevant prior expertise and publication records, and preferably be based outside of the UK.
